Biography Roy Merrill was born in El Dorado, Arkansas, and raised on a farm in Hope, Arkansas. There, his passion for comics was first ignited at age three when his parents, who collected comics, gave him their three-ring program Marvel Comics #1 from the company's "groundbreaking" Fantastic Four series. His older brother, Darrell, was an aspiring cartoonist who encouraged and showed interest in Roy's own efforts. Roy moved to Santa Ana, California, after high school, where he worked as a sports writer, teacher, and busboy before dropping out to become a cartoonist. He worked in advertising during the 1950s for companies such as Doan's Fruit, Stewart's Ice Cream, and Holiday Magic, and drew work for newspapers and magazines including the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner, Playboy, and TV Guide. He completed the US Army's Officer Candidate School, and served in the Vietnam War as a helicopter pilot, first in the U.S. Army, and then in the Air Force. He remained an active helicopter pilot until his retirement in 2004. The Phantom While still in the Army, Roy was recruited by Don Martin to draw some of the three-page Marvel Western-inspired, humorous features which were to star Martin's character, The Phantom, in his own title. Martin, who was under contract with Timely Comics at the time, had his own creative freedom to the extent that he provided the actual content and content ideas, but Roy b7e8fdf5c8

DesktopTrends:DesktopTrends is a total online desktop optimisation tool for all Windows users. The solutions can be scheduled for the end of each month or when the client needs to improve their desktop instantly. DesktopTrends Solution 1: Clear Your Desktop - Del.icio.us Cookie Cloud, Firefox and Google have been all over the news about the storage of personal information as a result of recently published data breaches. It is alarming how quickly the users are discovering the hidden dangers of relying on software-based services to store their personal data. For those who are not aware, personal data of those who use Google or Yahoo identity services can be retained on their website. The recent media attention regarding Google and Yahoo's data practices shows that it is important to store personal information in your own computer. Data stored on a computer is more vulnerable to attack than in the cloud. When the personal data is stored on your desktop your computer is your and your computer is you. This is true ownership. As long as you use your own computer and do not give it over to anyone else, your data remains yours, including your Internet data. If you have data on both your computer and the Internet be sure to choose one. DesktopTrends Solution 2: Delete Internet Explorer Cookies - Yahoo Internet Explorer (IE) is one of the most used browsers on the world wide web. Internet Explorer cookies are one of the most common sources for retrieving data from the browser you are visiting. The more websites you visit and the more you use a browser the more cookies you may end up with. Often times IE will stick to your computer and collect, store and use your information. This is a big privacy and security issue. By deleting Internet Explorer cookies you are freeing up a significant amount of computer resource and freeing up space on your hard disk that you can use for other things. DesktopTrends Solution 3: Delete
