There is a graphical overlay that allows players to see the corresponding data overlaid on the graphics. And of course there is an option in the FIFA Ultimate Team cards to view their stats, goals, and overall FIFA points. On the pitch, you'll get a different look at much of what you watch in FIFA. The new "top 3D mesh" system has changed the appearance of the pitch and ball, and players will now be significantly "rounder" than in the past. To put it simply: the roundness of a player makes him more powerful in the air; how he moves the ball has a greater impact on his movement and how he moves through tight spaces and beats his opponents. And finally, the player's appearance also changes based on whether he is one-on-one with another player, and whether he is actively working the ball, or not. New Finishing "Which side of the pitch will he decide to finish?" is now a question whose answer can be discovered through the implementation of the new "Wayback" movement system. This system requires the player to choose between passing to the nearest teammate or heading the ball. Because the player has an endless number of options on which way he can decide to travel, he has been given a new sense of spatial awareness. "Wayback" helps you not only read your opponent but also understand your opponent's reaction to the way that you use your options. Of course, this way back system also makes it harder to predict what the player might do next, and this unpredictability coupled with the new way of passing the ball, makes it even more difficult to defend against. When you have the ball, making the right decision is key to your success. The new "Auto Pass" function sees your teammates run towards the spot on the field where you are passing the ball. But of course, this runs the risk of creating clear passing lanes on the pitch. So for example, you can see that the player in the green jacket is half-heartedly running towards the ball. But he won't have time to reach it, as the defender has already closed the gap, and blocked the passing lane. Having said that, you can't always rely on your teammates. For example, in the
