population. The latex allergy is a respiratory tract allergy that represents a health problem in several industrialized countries. The aim of this work was to assess the prevalence of latex sensitization in a population of southern Italy. A prospective study was carried out on a sample of 201 consecutive patients referred to our allergy clinic. In all patients the skin prick test, the intradermal test and the serum specific IgE determination (CAP) to latex were performed. The prevalence of latex sensitization in our sample was 9.5%. The most common clinical symptom was the development of urticaria (6.4%), followed by oral symptoms (3.5%). The intradermal test was positive in 70% of cases (with a provocation dose of 0.05-0.3mg/mL). The most common IgE-mediated latex allergen (in our population) was Hev b1 (30.2%). Latex sensitization is common in our area, and although the clinical symptoms are not severe, they are quite relevant as regards the quality of life of patients.

Endoscopic Erb's point block of the medial nerve improves pain and function in patients with lateral elbow tendinopathy: a randomized controlled trial. Endoscopic injection of corticosteroids is a common treatment for lateral epicondylitis (tennis elbow), but there is no consensus on the optimal injection sites. We hypothesized that injection of the endoscopic Erb's point (EP) would be more effective than placebo injections in patients with lateral epicondylitis. We did a randomized controlled trial to determine whether injection of the EP would reduce pain and improve function. Patients were randomized into the experimental and placebo groups in a 1:1 ratio. Patients in the experimental group received 1 mL of a local anesthetic (bupivacaine 0.5% with epinephrine) followed by 1 mL of a corticosteroid (triamcinolone acetonide) at the EP. Patients in the placebo group received 1 mL of normal saline injected at the EP. Pain was measured by a visual analog scale (0 to 10), and function was measured by the Disability of the Arm, Shoulder and Hand (DASH
