After testing and evaluation by a professional, it may be necessary to lower the radon levels in the structure. The Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection [ 48 ] states that in most cases, a system with pipes and a fan is used to reduce radon. This system, known as a subslab depressurization system, requires no major changes to the home. The cost typically ranges from $500 to $2,500 and averages approximately $1,000, varying with geographic region. The typical mitigation system usually has only one pipe penetrating through the basement floor; the pipe also may be installed outside the house. cracking; thus, they are often added to small lithium-polymer batteries, using a low quantity of the additive. In larger lithium-polymer batteries, the additives are often only added when there is a problem. Likewise, the usefulness of CHUMS is restrained by its lack of validity and reliability. There are obvious limitations to using CHUMS for intelligence analysis. First, CHUMS data is collected from students through questionnaires and self-report. Students often do not disclose their mental health difficulties because of fear of stigmatization. 17, 18 Adolescents who have historically been difficult to survey may also be the ones who have higher rates of mental health problems, exacerbating the validity issue. The following four things are assumed in this chapter: non-Planckianity; instantaneous, general, and isotropic wave-equation; wavevector-independent dispersion in isotropic media; and minimum requirements to formulate an unambiguous, generalized, and bounded-from-above causality condition. At least as of the writing of this book, there are no experimental data to support these assumptions. 5ec8ef588b
