it sounds like your father was experiencing symptoms from having overgrown candida. a lot of doctors keep sedating him with antibiotics until it goes away on its own, which means he could be suffering for quite some time, and you should still be considering treatment even if it goes away on its own. my son is 13 and has muscle twitching since 6 years of age. he goes to a neurologist who prescribes him b12 shots every 2 months. the first few he had about 4 months ago, but it didnt help in the least. a week ago he had the second shot and is feeling a little better, but not a lot. he has never been sick a day in his life, so this is out of left field. do you think he has a vitamin deficiency. he does not take any drugs. he goes to a private school in the suburbs of denver. he was born in mexico and eats tacos and panini style whenever he gets the chance, lots of cheese and salsa. he plays a lot of soccer and has been playing softball since third grade. he also is a bit of a foodie like me and likes to try new foods and flavors every once in a while. he is a very good student and also very athletic, but has never been able to break 100 in math the whole time he has been alive. i would really like to get some advice from someone who knows a lot about nutrition, and hopefully some of you know the answer. my son is in the process of being referred for genetic testing if your interested in anything he might have, but the blood draws for that are not scheduled till august 4th. i have had the flu every year of my life since i was born, as well as become chronically ill at least every three years. in the past year i have noticed that my fatigue is worse in the morning then at night. i have been dealing with minor heart pains every other week and a lot of gastrointestinal problems that sometimes are triggered by a minor amount of stress. i have been on various meds for years and have not seemed to be able to get any relief from the fatigue and heart/gastro issues. i started taking 900 mg. of b-12 and so far it has helped my fatigue quite a bit. my health care provider says there could be an underlying issue causing the heart/gastro issues and has to rule out a cardiac issue as well. i was wondering if b12 might be helping your heart to beat well in the morning? i am not sure if you feel much better when you are not low on b12. thanks for any insight you can give me.

the young hegel suggests that socrates is afraid of his own world, that he is afraid of the realization that he is a slave, afraid of his future, afraid of the world of which he is a part. the elderly hegel suggests that socrates is afraid of this world, afraid of himself and his future, but still persists in this search.

hegel suggests that, if we had lived at the time of socrates, we might have said to him that we believed we knew the world, but this was because we did not know ourselves as slaves. to recognize this of ourselves is to develop the requisite courage. hegel thought this was the historical realization of philosophy. socrates was regularly accused by his opponents of abusing his citizenship in the city. one instance is in which socrates is alleged to have sold city-citizens as prisoners of war. the detractors charged that as a captive he could not harm his city, only serve it. bruno vico is regarded as the "father of modern historiography". vico had a controversial career, which saw him cast as a populist hero and as a dangerous foe of reform. his reputation changed as his life went on. no. it is either an over-the-counter source of b12 or its not. you cannot stimulate the body to absorb it any more than you can by giving it a shot. btw, if you have a serious illness like leukemia or myeloma, you should probably talk to your oncologist about the benefits of b12 shots. depression is the inability to achieve pleasure or the inability to avoid pain. however, depression is more than just an inability to experience pleasure.

people with major depression often have many other abnormal signs and symptoms, which indicates there is something happening at the sub-personal level that prevents the patient from experiencing pleasure.
